

MEMENTO LAUNCHES BANK FRAUD FORUM BLOG

Noted fraud management experts share insights, opinions and best practices in first blog focused exclusively on bank fraud

Concord, MA, March 24, 2009 - Memento, Inc., an award-winning provider of next-generation enterprise fraud management solutions, today introduced the Bank Fraud Forum, the industry's first blog focused exclusively on issues related to detecting and preventing bank fraud.

The Bank Fraud Forum blog is a collaborative, thought-provoking and "easily digested" online discussion about all aspects of bank fraud. Experienced fraud prevention experts and technology innovators cover the latest insights, news, best practices, and business challenges related to loss prevention and compliance. The blog also includes a weekly feature that highlights recent fraud headlines and provides commentary.

"At Memento, we believe that the more financial institutions collaborate, the better our industry will be at detecting, preventing, and responding to the costly and growing threat posed by bank fraud," said Mike Braatz, Vice President of Marketing at Memento. "We invite anyone with an interest in bank fraud prevention issues to follow and participate in the open discussion enabled by Bank Fraud Forum."

Topics and commentary already posted at the Bank Fraud Forum include:

- My Bank Doesn't Have a Fraud Problem. Mike Mulholand addresses the power of acceptance, knowledge and transparency in the fight against bank fraud.
- Top 10 Fraud Threats That Won't Go Away. Shirley Inscoe takes a look at the top fraud threats that promise to plague the industry for some time to come.
- The Economy is Down, Is Fraud on the Rise? A view on market trends and statistics that validate the conventional notion that fraud rises when the economy falls.

Visit www.bankfraudforum.com to see the entire Bank Fraud Forum blog, join the discussion, and follow new topics posted on a regular basis. Access is free, and email update and RSS subscriptions are available.
